Armstrong State College

Levi Sheftall D'Lyon
A Preliminary Biography

A Paper Submitted To
Dr. Roger K. Warlick
In Fulfillment of the Class Requirements of History 450/650

Department of History

By
Lorraine Netrick Abraham

Savannah, Georgia
May 1992
TABLE OF CONTENTS

Acknowledgements .................................................. 11
Abstract .................................................................... 111
I. Introduction .......................................................... 1
II. Family Background .................................................. 2
III. Early Life in Savannah ............................................. 4
IV. The Middle Years ................................................... 15
V. The Later Years ....................................................... 24
VI. Descendants .......................................................... 32
VII. Epilogue .............................................................. 34
Appendix A ............................................................... 36
Appendix B ............................................................... 37
Appendix C ............................................................... 38
Appendix D ............................................................... 39
Sources Consulted ...................................................... 40
Acknowledgements

I wish to thank my husband, Michael, for his patience, understanding, and unfailing assistance with this project. Many thanks to my good friends: Brett Campbell, John Edwards, and Pam Crews who provided help, support, and valuable suggestions all along the way. To the unfailingly cheerful Beth Keaton, who made this project fun, I say, "A burden shared is a burden halved."

For their generosity in providing information and assistance, I wish to thank Rabbi Arnold M. Belzer, Connie Munn, John Sheftall and Anna Jarquin. I am indebted to Ms. Ruth D'Lyon Pondrom for graciously sharing her family memories with a complete stranger who descended upon her home unannounced.

Thanks to Dr. Roger K. Warlick for his guidance and patience.
Levi Sheftall D'Lyon

Levi Sheftall D'Lyon (b. Oct. 23, 1791-Savannah, d. Aug. 28, 1863-Savannah). A descendant of one of the 34 original Jewish families that settled in Savannah in 1733. A prominent attorney in Savannah from 1809 until his death, a member of the Georgia Legislature from 1820-21, and a city alderman: 1815-17, 1819-22, & 1827-29. He was a judge of the Court of Common Pleas from 1838-45 and a City Court judge from 1861-63. In the Georgia Hussars he attained the rank of cornet. D'Lyon was a lifelong Democratic Party activist. He married Leonora DelaMotta in 1818, & then, after her death in childbirth, her sister Rebecca in 1820. He was the father of five children, including Leonorean D'Lyon, a professor of languages, James W. D'Lyon, a Westpoint graduate, and Leonora Harby Randall, a Hebrew scholar.
I. Introduction

Levi Sheftall D'Lyon is a man who seems destined for obscurity. While his contributions to the city of Savannah and to Georgia are significant, after this brief moment of revitalization, they will again fade back into the mists of time. Although Levi D'Lyon faithfully served Savannah as an alderman for seven administrations and sat on the benches of the City Court and the Court of Common Pleas, there is no known portrait or photograph of him. While tracking his political and professional life proved uncomplicated, the documentation about his personal life contained gaps and errors. Perhaps some of the difficulty lay in the many variations on the spelling of D'Lyon. His handwritten will and two extant letters in the Georgia Historical Society reveal that he spelled his name "D'Lyon." although almost all printed documentation about him and his family use the spelling "DeLyon." Levi Sheftall D'Lyon is not even buried in the proper plot in the Laurel Grove Cemetery records. His grave is located next to his assigned plot.

'Glenda Anderson, the City of Savannah librarian, and her staff were very generous with their time in searching the City Hall Archives for a picture of Judge D'Lyon. Unfortunately, their efforts were unsuccessful.

Family Background

Levi Sheftall D'Lyon was a member of a notable Savannah Jewish family. The history of the D'Lyon family in America is linked with that of Savannah Jewry from its beginning:

Until the years succeeding the Revolution, the Jewish history of Savannah was practically confined to the records of the families of Sheftall, Minis, and D'Lyon...3

Levi Sheftall D'Lyon was the great-grandson of Abraham D'Lyon, one of the thirty-four original Jewish settlers of Savannah who arrived shortly after Oglethorpe:

On July 11,1733 a tiny vessel rode the harbor of Georgia's first and then infant town of Savannah... Weary from their lengthy trip, there landed on the soil of Georgia... Abraham D'Lyon.4

Fleeing the Portuguese Inquisition, Abraham D'Lyon was a vintner. His wife, Esther Nunez, and Rebecca, his oldest child, arrived later that year via London.5 Abraham D'Lyon attempted to begin viticulture in coastal Georgia, but was unsuccessful due to a lack of financial support from the Trustees for his endeavor.6

---

It is likely that the D'Lyon family in Savannah were the first Jewish family to lose a loved one. No special burial ground was at first provided by the Jewish settlers. One of the family of D'Lyon must have been among the first stricken, because a donor of that name dedicated a small tract of land for a family burial ground, and interments were made therein. This became known as the 'DeLyon Cemetery'. It is a local tradition that a Jew other than this particular family died, application was made for the use of the DeLyon Cemetery and permission was refused.7

James Oglethorpe allocated land for a public Hebrew cemetery after this incident, according to tradition.8

Levi D'Lyon's grandfather, Isaac, was the fourth child of Abraham D'Lyon and Esther Nunez. Isaac D'Lyon married Rinah Tobias of Charleston in September 1762. Their fourth child, Abraham D'Lyon, was the father of Levi D'Lyon.9

Abraham D'Lyon married Sarah Sheftall on June 1, 1785 in Savannah. Levi Sheftall D'Lyon is the fourth of this couple's ten children10 and is named after his maternal grandfather.11 Like his D'Lyon grandson and namesake, Levi Sheftall had also married into the DeLaMotta family. His bride was Rebecca DeLaMotta, the great-aunt of Levi D'Lyon's two wives, Leonora and Rebecca.12

8Ibid., 172.
9Stern, Jewish Families, 57.
12Stern, Jewish Families, 56.
Early Life in Savannah

Levi Sheftall D'Lyon was born in Savannah on October 23, 1791.¹² No records were discovered regarding his childhood or his education.¹³ In the spring of 1809, at the age of nineteen, Levi was admitted to the Bar in the Superior Court of Chatham County.¹⁴ Whether he practiced law alone or with a partner during his earliest years as an attorney is unknown. However, by July 4, 1822, he was in a law practice with Jacob DeLaMotta, his brother-in-law and distant cousin.¹⁵ On that date, the law office of DeLaMotta and D'Lyon was moved to "the room formerly occupied as the Georgian [newspaper] office over Mssrs. Candry and DuLauere's confectionery store."¹⁶

On June 29, 1809, Levi published a lengthy article in the Republican and Savannah Evening Gazette newspaper in which he proposed to publish written Superior Court decisions

¹²Stern, Jewish Families, 57.

¹³Levi D'Lyon oldest son, Leonorean, graduated from Yale University "by special act" at the age of sixteen, according to Henry Cohen, "The Jews in Texas," Publications of the American Jewish Historical Society, vol. IV (1896),15. It is likely that Levi may have sent to his son to his own alma mater. Yale was a popular institution with Georgia families in the post-Revolutionary days. Sheftall (c.f. interview, May 21, 1992) also suggested that Levi may have studied law under Judge Litchfield at his private school.

¹⁴The Savannah Republican and Savannah Evening Ledger (Savannah, Georgia) May 2, 1809, p. 3, c. 2.

¹⁵Stern, Jewish Families, 56, and Sheftall (c.f. interview, May 21, 1992).

¹⁶The Savannah Museum, (Savannah, Georgia) March 28, 1809, p. 3, c. 2.
on a private basis to interested subscribers. Apparently, this idea did not enjoy much popularity, as no documentation has been located indicating that Levi pursued it further.

The year of 1816 was a watershed for Levi D'Lyon. He began what was to become an all-consuming passion for politics with his appointment to fill one of the alderman seats left vacant by the resignations of six of the fourteen aldermen on the City Council of Savannah. His term of office began on April 24, 1816, with the full term of office running from September 11, 1815 to September 9, 1816. The first of Levi's many real-estate transactions occurred on April 1, 1816, when he bought a house at 19 (new numbering) east York street, between Drayton and Bull Streets (Eastern half of Lot 3, Percival Ward). Levi was to live in this three-story brick house for the rest of his life. In July of 1816, Levi purchased his first Negro slave, a male by the

---

1 The Savannah Republican and Savannah Evening Ledger, (Savannah, Georgia) June 29, 1809, p. 2, c. 1.

2 Thomas Gamble, compiler. A History of the City Government of Savannah from 1790 to 1901, (Savannah: City Council of Savannah, 1900), 92.

20 Chatham County Superior Court, (Savannah, Georgia) Deed Book 2G, Folio 233.

21 See Appendix B, Cadastral Survey for the Eastern half of Lot 3, Percival Ward. The Cadastral Survey prepared in 1937 describes a 3-story brick house in poor condition. It is a "leap of faith" on the author's part that this is a description of the D'Lyon residence, based upon the longevity of brick buildings and the age implied by its poor condition.
care of Ansell.²² From September 9, 1816 until September 8, 1817, Levi served in another administration of the Savannah City Council as an alderman.²³

Levi D'Lyon married seventeen year old Leonora DeLaMotta in Charleston, South Carolina on March 18, 1818.²⁴ It is probable that the marriage was an arranged one, as this was a common Jewish custom at the time.²⁵ The marriage settlement between Leonora and Levi brought him another house on Wright Square, along with two slaves.²⁶ Unfortunately, the deed fails to indicate the lot number or street address of this property. The marriage was tragically brief. Leonora died of childbed fever on January 29, 1819, eight days after giving birth to their son, Leonorean.²⁷ She is buried in the ²²Chatham County Superior Court, (Savannah, Georgia) Deed Book 2G, Folio 115.

²³Gamble, History of Savannah, 92.

²⁴B. H. Levy, Savannah's Old Jewish Community Cemeteries, (Macon: Mercer University Press, 1983) 44, quoting The Charleston City Gazette (Charleston, South Carolina) March 21, 1818. Levy points out in the footnote on page 99 that Stern in First Families (57) has the date listed erroneously as March 1, 1818.

²⁵Rabbi Arnold M. Belzer, interview by author, April 21, 1992, Congregation Mickve Israel, Savannah, Georgia.

²⁶Chatham County Superior Court, (Savannah, Georgia) Deed Book 2H, Folio 362.

²⁷Chatham County (Georgia) Vital Records, Death Certificate of Leonora DeLaMotta D'Lyon. B. H. Levy points out in Savannah's Cemeteries, 45, that the Death Certificate date of January 20, 1819 cannot be correct as Leonorean was born on the next day. (c.f. Columbia Museum and Savannah Gazette, February 1, 1819, p.2 c.5, indicates a date of January 29, 1819.)
Old Hebrew Cemetery. After the funeral, Levi traveled to Charleston, where his wife's parents lived, and returned to Savannah on February 25, 1819.

It is not known if Levi ran for alderman in 1819 and was defeated or if the tumultuous events in his personal life forced him to suspend his political career temporarily. By August of 1819, Levi D'Lyon revitalized his political career and made a bid for reelection to the office of city alderman. He was reelected one of fourteen aldermen on September 5, 1819 with 375 votes. In late October of 1819, Levi was appointed one of the managers of the Chatham Dispensary by the Savannah City Council. The Chatham Dispensary was a free medical clinic and pharmacy for the poor and was located at the apothecary shop of Dr. Frederick Kreeger in Old Market Square. As Secretary of the Chatham

---

28 Levy, Savannah Cemeteries, 45.
29 Columbia Museum and Savannah Gazette, February 25, 1819, p.3 c.1.
30 Ibid., August 7, 1819, p.2 c.4.
31 Ibid., September 9, 1819, p.2 c.4.
32 Ibid., October 29, 1819, p.3 c.2.
33 Columbia Museum and Savannah Gazette, July 20, 1820, p.3 c.2. Georgian, July 15, 1820, p.3 c.4.
    " July 25, 1820, p.3 c.4.
    " July 27, 1820, p.1 c.2.
    " August 1, 1820, p.2 c.5.
    " September 23, 1820, p.3 c.1.
Dispensary, Levi D'Lyon issued many advertisements in the local newspaper. During 1819, his political activism took on another aspect with his joining a local militia, the Georgia Hussars as a second corporal.

Savannah experienced a tremendous conflagration in January of 1820 when much of downtown was burned. Levi D'Lyon was listed in the newspaper as having lost personal property, but not his residence. His efforts on behalf of the Chatham Dispensary kept him busy in the spring of 1820, especially during the yellow fever epidemic that struck Savannah in 1820. At the Independence Day dinner of the Georgia Hussars, Levi D'Lyon made a political speech in praise of Andrew Jackson. Throughout the years, he would make many more impassioned political speeches and toasts on a host of subjects.

On August 26, 1820, seventeen months after the death of his first wife, Levi D'Lyon returned to Charleston and married her older sister, Rebecca. It was a traditional

---

34 Georgian, July 25, 1820, p.1 c.1.

36 Columbia Museum and Savannah Gazette, January 15, 1820, p.2 c.3.

38 Georgian, July 7, 1820, p.3 c.1.

Jewish practice at this time for a widowed spouse to marry another sibling, whether or not the first marriage had been arranged.⁴⁰ An innocuous but charming announcement in the Columbia Museum and Savannah Gazette newspaper of September 2, 1820 noted that Mr. Levi D'Lyon returned from Charleston aboard the schooner, Industry, "with lady."⁴¹ The newlyweds settled into the house on York Street, with Rebecca taking over the care of her sister's infant son.⁴²

By the time of the 1820 census, the D'Lyon house had grown considerably. Besides Levi, Rebecca, and the baby, Leonorean, there was an additional white male between the ages of sixteen and twenty-six and a white female between the ages of twenty-six and forty-five.⁴³ Their identities are not known. There were also nine slaves: three males and six females.⁴⁴ The only Chatham County Superior Court slave deed in Levi's name prior to this was for the male, Ansell, purchased in 1816, and two others that were his as part of Leonora's marriage settlement. The other six were either bought elsewhere, were already in Levi's possession, or were ⁴⁰Rabbi Arnold M. Belzer, interview by author, May 18, 1992, Congregation Mickve Israel, Savannah, Georgia.

---

⁴¹Ibid., September 2, 1820, p.3 c.2.

⁴²Levy, Savannah Cemeteries, 44-45.

⁴³Georgia Census of 1820 (Chatham County) p.1.

⁴⁴Ibid.
children of the other slaves. Four are listed as children under the age of fourteen.

The political career of Levi continued with his reelection as an alderman with 431 votes on September 4, 1820. With the exception of the Chatham Dispensary, he was not particularly active on many of the various City Council committees. He was on the committee for Public Docks and the Fire and Bucket committee.* On November 27, 1820 Levi presented bills before the City Council to create a legionnary corps and an organization for river pilots in Savannah. Levi also voted to stop support payments to the city's paupers.***

Subsequent events indicate that the office of city alderman was more than a stepping stone in the political career of Levi D'Lyon. However, just eight days after his election as alderman, the Chatham County Democratic Committee chose Levi D'Lyon as their candidate for the Georgia Legislature, and a somewhat lengthy (by the standards of the time) election campaign began. Seven months later, Levi

Ibid. 1.

Columbia Museum and Savannah Gazette, September 7, 1820, p. 3 c.1.

*Georgian, September 14, 1820, p. 3 c.1.

Daily Georgian, November 27, 1820, p. 2 c.3.

Ibid., March 16, 1821, p. 3 c.5.

Columbia Museum and Savannah Gazette, September 12, 1820, p. 2, c. 5.
D'Lyon was elected as a Chatham County Representative to the Georgia Legislature in Milledgeville, the state capitol at that time.¹

The Georgia Legislature during Levi D'Lyon's term of office was faced with the effects of an immigration explosion. Georgia was growing rapidly by the 1820's and the white population had succeeded in displacing the Creek Indians from their tribal lands. Levi D'Lyon voted to reimburse the Creeks for the confiscation of their lands.²

In modern times, a representative to the Georgia legislature has responsibilities that preclude the holding of other offices. However, such was not the case in the 1820's and Levi D'Lyon began his reelection bid for City of Savannah alderman in August of 1821.³ He succeeded in winning another term on September 3, 1821 with 371 votes.⁴ Obviously, local politics played as important a role in Levi's life as those at the state level.

On January 27, 1821, Levi received a gift of his first large tract of rural land in Irwin County (Plat 2, District 7) from the grandfather of his wives, Jacob Canter. He paid

---
³Ibid., August 11, 1821, p. 3, c. 4.
⁴Ibid., August 28, 1821, p. 3, c. 4.
⁵Ibid., September 6, 1821, p. 3, c. 1.
Jacob Cantor fifteen dollars at the closing for this tract of land of unspecified size. Much of Levi's law practice involved the handling of business in guardianships for free people of color. He purchased two-thirds of two lots (6 and 7) of Oglethorpe Ward for Catherine Mills in this capacity on April 10, 1822. The Georgian newspaper of December 24, 1821 listed Levi D'Lyon as the winner of Lot 51 in the Georgia Land Lottery. Two slave transactions occurred in 1823 when Levi D'Lyon sold a male slave named Daniel to Henry L. Grovenstine for the sum of one hundred dollars, and later, a sale of six slaves to T. S. Morel for nineteen hundred dollars. After briefly resigning his membership in the Georgia Hussars on February 22, 1822 at the rank of first corporal, Levi was reinstated and promoted to third sergeant in 1823. Within the same year, he was promoted three more times, from third to second sergeant and on to first sergeant, and finally achieving the rank of cornet.

Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia) Deed Book 2K, Folio 254.

Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia) Deed Book 2L, Folio 105.

Georgian, December 24, 1821, p. 2, c. 3.

Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia) Deed Book 2M, Folio 83.

Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia) Deed Book 2M, Folio 203.

Duncan, Georgia Hussars, 104-114.

Ibid., 99-104.
As always, politics continued in the forefront of Levi D'Lyon's life. Throughout August of 1822, Levi campaigned vigorously for reelection to the Georgia Legislature as a Chatham County representative. He was staunchly supported by a number of citizen's groups, including one group who called themselves the "Radicals." At this same time, Levi was also running for another term as a City of Savannah alderman. It was surely a severe blow to his political aspirations when Levi lost his reelection bid for City alderman on Monday, September 2, 1822.

The intensity of Levi's political passion can be judged by a "letter to the public" he wrote, which appeared on September 24, 1822 in the Savannah Museum newspaper. In what must have been a highly explosive family situation, Levi published a refutation of political implications made by his brother. The brother involved was not mentioned by name. At a political meeting held at the shop of a Mr. Papote, Levi D'Lyon's brother posted his name as supporting the election of Mordecai Sheftall, a cousin and professional rival, who was also running for the Georgia Legislature. Levi wrote in his letter that this was "entirely without my knowledge and certainly at variance with my wishes. . . We were opposed upon these points and all others for the last twelve years."

---

*"Savannah Museum, August 10, 1822, p.3 c.1.

*"Ibid., September 5, 1822, p.3 c.1.
As for his brother, an obviously incensed Levi D'Lyon wrote, "he acts for himself and I am not accountable for what he does." Whether this incident was a deciding factor or not, the people of Chatham County rejected Levi D'Lyon in his Georgia Legislature reelection bid in early October. This was the end of state level politics for Levi. In the summer of 1823, Levi D'Lyon unsuccessfully attempted to regain a seat on the Savannah City Council as an alderman.

*Ibid., September 24, 1822, p. 3, c. 3.
Georgian, October 10, 1822, p. 2, c. 1.
Ibid., July 12, 1823, p. 3, c. 2.
IV. The Middle Years

Rebecca DeLaMotta D'Lyon gave birth to her first child, Leonora Rebecca D'Lyon on January 24, 1824. Over the next five years, she was to give birth to three more sons: Isaac Mordecai, born between November of 1824 and February of 1825, James Wayne, born December 18, 1825, and finally Clarence Abraham, born on February 7, 1829. The latter years of the 1820's saw Levi once again in the political arena. He served two more terms as a City of Savannah alderman from September 10, 1827 until September 14, 1829. He also remained active in the Georgia Hussars until January of 1827.

The DeLaMotta girls may have been delicate by nature or perhaps giving birth to so many children in such a short time took its toll on Rebecca, for she died ten days after the birth of Clarence, at the age of thirty. She was buried alongside her sister in the Old Hebrew Cemetery.

---

*Tombstone of James W. D'Lyon, Lot 1402, Laurel Grove Cemetery, Savannah, Georgia.

Tombstone of Clarence A. D'Lyon, Lot 1402, Laurel Grove Cemetery, Savannah, Georgia.

Gamble, History of Savannah, 130.

Duncan, Georgia Hussars, 86.

'Chatham County Vital Records, Death Certificate of Rebecca D'Lyon, February 17, 1829 (c.f. Levy, Savannah Cemeteries, 45).

"Levy, Savannah Cemeteries, 45 (c.f. personal visit to the Old Hebrew Cemetery, April 24, 1992).
Rebecca's death must have completely disheartened Levi; he never married again.

Levi D'Lyon was never active in Congregation Mickve Israel, although he was a member at least in name. Even at the time of his wife's death, when many other men would have sought solace in their religion, his absence from any temple records during this period speaks volumes about his distance from the religious life of the Jewish community in Savannah.\(^3\)

A male slave named Charles was added to the D'Lyon household in May of 1825, for whom Levi paid the sum of four hundred fifty dollars.\(^4\) One year later, D'Lyon continued his slaving activities with the purchase of five slaves: Phoebe and her children, Lizzie, Polly, Peter, and Henry, for the sum of seven hundred fifty dollars.\(^5\) The size of the household probably reached a peak in 1830, a year after the death of Rebecca. According to the 1830 census, the household had six white occupants, Levi and the five children, and twenty-three slaves.\(^6\)

\(^3\)Rubin, Third to None, 104 (Levi D'Lyon is only mentioned as being a congregation member active in local government).

\(^4\)Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia) Deed Book 2P, Folio 487.

\(^5\)Ibid., Deed Book 2N, Folio 528.

\(^6\)Georgia Census of 1830 (Chatham County) p.24, entry 263.
About this time, a free woman of color came to Levi's rescue. Estelle Savage took over the management of the burgeoning D'Lyon household, and its five littlest occupants became her greatest mission. Obviously, she was a very special woman to Levi D'Lyon. In his will, he spoke of Estelle Savage in the fondest terms and thanked her for her "care, attention, and kindness" to his infant children.

The late 1820's and early 1830's witnessed the substantial growth of both Levi's law practice and personal assets. He ventured into the real estate market. In 1827, he sold a brick tenement (Lot 13, Jackson Ward) to his mother-in-law, Sarah DeLaMotta. He bought and sold various properties on York Street in the immediate vicinity of his home on Wright Square. One piece of real estate on York Street (Lot 26, Liberty Ward) was bought from his father and sold, bought back, and sold through mortgages several times.

Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia) Deed Book 3C, Folio 249, is a statement entered in the public record that Levi D'Lyon had known Estelle Savage since 1824 and could vouch for her sterling character.

*Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia) Deed Book 2D, Folio 142.

Ibid., Deed Book 3W, Folio 16.
 Deed Book 3R, Folio 284.
 Deed Book 2P, Folio 222.
 Deed Book 3D, Folio 46.
 Deed Book 3V, Folio 306.
 Deed Book 3W, Folio 201.
always at a substantial profit to Levi. On April 4, 1828, Levi purchased four slaves and the eastern half of Lot 26, Yamacraw Ward from his brother, Isaac. Slave transactions were also a source of income for Levi D'Lyon. Nancy, a forty-two year old female slave, was sold for three hundred dollars in November of 1827. Sally, another female, sold for four hundred dollars in 1830. He sold off the four children of his slave Phoebe in 1830, making a three hundred dollar profit over his original purchase price for all five slaves and keeping Phoebe in the bargain. The year 1835 saw four female slaves sold in two transactions for a total price of sixteen hundred dollars.

On March 1, 1832 Levi sold fifty-seven acres in two plots to prominent Savannahian, Henry McAlpin. This property was part of a large tract of land owned by Levi on Augusta Road that was bordered by McAlpin's land to the north.

---

Ibid., Deed Book 4X, Folio 286.
" Deed Book 2U, Folio 54.
" Deed Book 20, Folio 147.
" Deed Book 20, Folio 233.
" Deed Book 2U, Folio 51.

Ibid., Deed Book 20, Folio 479.

Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia)
Deed Book 20, Folio 368.

Ibid., Deed Book 3H, Folio 238.

Ibid., Deed Book 20, Folio 331.

*"Ibid., Deed Book 2T, Folio 230.
" Deed Book 2T, Folio 262.

7Ibid., Deed Book 2R, Folio 56.
and east. Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church bought his lot on Oglethorpe Square for seven hundred dollars on August 5, 1834.

His passion for political life was mollified by Levi's activism in the Chatham County Democratic Party. His ardent belief in liberty (but not for his slaves) and his speaking ability made him a popular guest at Democratic functions. His toasting of the patriots of Ireland at an Irish Democratic dinner attests to his popularity and political ideals. His zeal for liberty turned Levi's attention to the fight for Texas independence from Mexico. As chairman of the Texas sympathizers in Savannah, Levi arranged for a fund drive to assist the cause on September 2, 1835.

The idea of a judgeship for Levi D'Lyon was first brought to light in November of 1836, when he received four votes in the Georgia Legislature for the bench of the Superior Court, Eastern District. What made this incident remarkable, was the fact that Levi D'Lyon was not a candidate. In an election conducted in November of 1837, Levi was a candidate for the bench of the Court of Common

Ibid., Deed Book 2T, Folio 17.

Georgian, March 19, 1831, p. 3, c. 4.

Claude Elliott, "Georgia and the Texas Revolution," Georgia Historical Quarterly, vol. XXVIII (28) (December, 1944) 240, quotes the Georgian, September 6, 1835, p. 2, c .2.

Daily Georgian, November 14, 1836, p. 2, c. 1.
pleas, Oyez and Terminus. He lost to John C. Nicoll.*2
But it seemed that fate had determined that some day, Levi
D'Lyon was destined to become a judge.

Perhaps banking was a field for which Levi D'Lyon was also destined. In February of 1836, his first major loan was negotiated, when he loaned Ebenezer Jenckes the sum of $7,627.06. Repayment was to be in two equal payments one year apart.*2 Throughout the rest of his life, Levi would make substantial profits loaning money against real estate.*2

The period of 1836 to 1840 was probably the best time of Levi D'Lyon's life since the tragic death of his second wife, Rebecca. His law practice, real estate and banking ventures were all highly successful. A register of the Free Persons of Color in Savannah, published in the Georgian on August 21, 1838 listed Levi as the guardian of fifteen different people and their families.*3 In April of 1838,
Levi was selected to represent Chatham County at the state

*2 Daily Georgian, November 15, 1837, p. 2, c. 2.
*3 Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia)
Deed Book 2U, Folio 53.

Ibid., Deed Book 2U, Folio 299.
" Deed Book 3D, Folio 48.
" Deed Book 3D, Folio 172.
" Deed Book 3H, Folio 213.
" Deed Book 3L, Folio 112.
" Deed Book 3L, Folio 334.
" Deed Book 3O, Folio 496.
" Deed Book 3P, Folio 69.
" Deed Book 3R, Folio 473.
" Deed Book 3T, Folio 484.
" Deed Book 3W, Folio 201.

Daily Georgian, August 21, 1838, p. 4, c. 2-6.
Democratic Convention. Always the dynamic speaker, Levi was asked to read the Declaration of Independence at the Fourth of July festivities in Savannah.

Without a doubt, the highlight of Levi Sheftall D'Lyon's long life took place in November of 1838. Levi was elected by the Georgia Legislature to the bench of the Court of Common Pleas, Oyey and Terminer. He beat his archrival, Mordecai Sheftall, by a margin of nineteen votes.

In 1840, the D'Lyon household was still probably quite large. Unfortunately, it was not listed in the 1840 census. The children would still have been at home, with the possible exception of Leonorean, who was twenty-one. The daughter, Leonora, was a strong-willed girl of fifteen when she went against her father's wishes and married Levi Charles Harby on January 31, 1842. Harby was a first Lieutenant in the United States Navy, and was forty-two years old at the time. The couple were married in St. Mary's, Georgia by a Presbyterian minister, although both bride and groom were Jewish. Levi D'Lyon hated Harby, and Leonora was disowned.*

Ibid., April 29, 1838, p.2 c.2.

Ibid., June 29, 1838, p.2 c.3.

*Ibid., November 13, 1838, p.2 c.3.

Chatham County Probate Court, Record of Marriages 1806-1851, Folio 99, marriage license number 2400, January 20, 1842, lists marriage date as January 31, 1842 by W. Baird, Presbyterian Minister of St. Mary's, Georgia (c.f. Stern, Genealogies, 57 and 93).

*D'Lyon, Will, Folio 26. (c.f. Sheftall, Interview.)
Levi D'Lyon served as judge of the Court of Common Pleas, Oyez and Terminer, until February of 1845. His law practice was not neglected during this period. In a letter to fellow attorney, Colonel Alexander Atkinson, dated June 15, 1843, Levi D'Lyon refers to having business in the courts of Appling, Camden, and Liberty counties. As a lawyer, Levi was highly respected. Charles C. Jones wrote of him in A History of Savannah, Georgia:

His personal magnetism, his fidelity to his clients, his fluency of speech, and his ability soon drew him a lucrative practice. By his professional labors, he made a comfortable fortune.

The politics of States' Rights gripped the country in the 1840's, and Levi D'Lyon was more active in the Democratic Party than ever before. In the summer of 1840, he addressed many Democratic meetings and declared himself an enthusiastic supporter of Martin Van Buren for the presidency. His oldest son, Leonorean, spoke at these meetings with him.

As with other Savannah notables, the public aspect of Levi D'Lyon's life is difficult to reconstruct during the

---

102 Alexander Atkinson Papers, Georgia Historical Society Manuscript Collection, Manuscript 1198, Item 18, Folder 2.

104 Daily Georgian, August 14, 1840, p. 2, c. 5.

latter half of the 1840's, owing to a lack of newspaper indexes for this period. On June 3, 1843, Levi, his brothers, Isaac and Mordecai, and his sisters, Anna and Rebecca appointed Abraham B. Fannin to take out a grant on a land lottery lot (Chatham County lot 325-18-3) of their father's estate for them. Another real estate transaction was the sale of a large tract of land. On December 18, 1851, Levi sold a 103 acre tract of land known as the "Schoolhouse Tract," surrounding the Isle of Hope Church to Stephen Dupon. The deed is an interesting one. The actual sale was for all the land surrounding the church, with the exception of the one acre upon which the church actually stood. It also provided an easement for access to the church.

107 Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia) Deed Book 31, Folio 210.
V. The Later Years

The 1850 census found Levi D'Lyon was the only white member of his household.\(^{10}\) This census gives a very incisive picture of his family's situation at the time. His daughter, Leonora Harby, lived in Savannah with her husband and three children.\(^{11}\) Leonorean had taken up residence in Camden County.\(^{11}\) Isaac, the third child, was at this time untraceable. Clarence, the youngest son, was a hospital steward at the Savannah Poor House and Hospital.\(^{11}\) Lastly, James, a West Point graduate, was living in Savannah with his twenty year old wife, Elizabeth, and one daughter, Leonora. He was, at this time, the City of Savannah Surveyor.\(^{12}\)

Tragedy struck the D'Lyon family in 1854, with the death of Clarence.\(^{13}\) He had married Elizabeth Seabrook Curtis of St. Mary's, Georgia just ten months before, and left no children. Four months later, James D'Lyon died after a brief

---

\(^{10}\)Georgia Census of 1850 (Chatham County), entry 259.

\(^{11}\)Ibid., entry 96.

\(^{11}\)Georgia Census of 1850 (Camden County) 9th District, entry 387.

\(^{11}\)Georgia Census of 1850 (Chatham County), entry 1267.

\(^{12}\)Ibid., entry 88.

\(^{13}\)Stern, Jewish Families, 57. (c.f. Tombstone of Clarence D'Lyon, lot 1402, Laurel Grove Cemetery, Savannah, Georgia.)
illness. He left behind three daughters and a pregnant widow. Within two years, Levi's granddaughter, Elizabeth Josephine, the second child of James and Elizabeth, died at the age of six. At the time of "Little Lizzie's" death, James was reinterred in Laurel Grove Cemetery, along with his brother, Clarence. James had been buried in the Old Hebrew Cemetery, and Clarence was moved from St. Mary's, Georgia.

By the mid 1850's, Levi D'Lyon was an old and venerable member of the Democratic party in Chatham County. He was called upon to officiate at polling places and serve on Boards of Inquiry that dealt with such weighty matters as the terms of judges. In May of 1857, Levi was once again chosen as a delegate to the state Democratic Convention.

His law practice was still flourishing. One of his most important clients was the Timbervcutter's Bank. It is not

---

12"March 1, 1855, p. 3, c. 2.
13"Sheftall, Interview.
15"(c.f. Tombstone of Elizabeth "Little Lizzie" D'Lyon, lot 1402, Laurel Grove Cemetery, Savannah, Georgia.)
17"Daily Georgian, December 1, 1855, p. 2, c. 2.
20"Ibid., January 29, 1858, p. 2, c. 1.
known when Levi went into private law practice. Jacob DeLaMotta, his law partner and brother-in-law, died in 1851. The Savannah City Directories listed Levi D’Lyon’s office at 201 (new numbering) York Street, at the eastern corner of Abercorn and York Streets. Interestingly, for all the property Levi owned on York Street (including the entire block between Drayton and Bull Streets) he did not own his office building. The Schreck Index indicated that this property had several owners, but he was not one of them (Lot 1, Fourth Tything, Anson Ward).

In December of 1859, Levi was among a group of concerned citizens who spoke out in favor of forming a “vigilance committee for the better preservation of Southern Rights.” The following month, Levi, as a member of the Chatham County Democratic Committee, called for a meeting at St. Andrews Hall to discuss their ideas for the platform of the upcoming Democratic Convention in Charleston. This was to be one of the loudest and potentially most dangerous meetings in Savannah history. The meeting was attended by quite a crowd. Several people, including Levi, made eloquent speeches about their choices for presidential candidate and States’ rights.

---

122 Sheftall, Interview.

123 Savannah City Directory of 1858, 24.

123 1859, 69 and 179.

123 1860, 64 and 169.

125 Ibid., January 26, 1860, p. 2, c. 1.
The crowd became so boisterous that it was feared a riot was about to ensue. Levi D'Lyon restored order by calling for a chairman to be elected to take control and nominating Richard D. Arnold. Mr. Arnold was quickly elected and calm prevailed. "Two days later, another lively meeting was conducted to choose the delegates to the Convention. Once again, Levi could be found making political speeches. It was finally decided to allow the delegates to choose the presidential nominee for themselves, rather than send them with instructions to vote for Cobb."

At some time prior to 1860, Levi D'Lyon came into possession of a 110 acre tract of land that was once part of the Harrack Plantation. It was difficult to indentify the location of this tract, but the description of the property on the deed from its sale at Levi D'Lyon's death indicates it was on Wyly Island. "Levi gave five acres of this land to Annie Sheftall and her children on June 23, 1860, for the express purpose of building a summerhouse."

In January of 1861, Levi D'Lyon was once more elected to the bench. He became Judge of the City Court of Savannah. "He was almost seventy years old and still very 123Ibid.

125Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia) Deed Book 3W, Folio 209.
126Ibid., Deed Book 3T, Folio 337.
127Gamble, History of Savannah, 454.
active in political life. Judge D'Lyon worked tirelessly for orderly establishment of the new Confederate government after the beginning of the War Between the States. As a member of the committee to set up the Confederate court system, it was his honor to inform Julian Hartridge that he had been selected unanimously to be the nominee to the newly created bench of the First District Court of the Confederate States of America. 31 Julian Hartridge was an old friend and one of the executors of Levi's will. 32

At the age of seventy, Levi D'Lyon felt the time had come to write his last will and testament. He did so on April 19, 1862. 33 His will, written in a clear and steady hand, offers a great deal of insight into his character. He wanted everything he owned sold at auction and the proceeds were to be divided as follows: Leonorean and Isaac, his two surviving sons, were to receive one thousand dollars each. The rest of his money was to be invested into a diversity of stocks and bonds. After five years, these were to be turned back into the original capital and its earned interest. Leonorean and Isaac were to share the interest, and the three surviving daughters of James (Leonora, Rebecca and Josephine) were to have equal shares in the original capital. The will was very specific in stating that the granddaughters were to 32 D'Lyon, Will, Folio 22-39, passim.

33 Ibid., Folio 27.
have this money in their own right, without having to share it with any future husbands. This was surely a direct insult to his daughter, Leonora Harby, who had married against his will to a man he despised. He went on to heap bitter recriminations upon Leonora in the document:

My reasons for this course are well known, and I trust it will be as an example to all daughters who treat with contempt and utter disrespect, the kindest of parents, as well as the many prowlers [?] upon society, who for selfish and base purposes, destroy the peace and happiness of humane families.

He also provided a lot in Curriytown and one thousand dollars for his loyal housekeeper, Estelle Savage.

The property inventory of Levi D'Lyon's estate indicated that his most valuable piece of personal property was a twenty-eight year old female slave by the name of Anna D'Lyon and her five children. Their value was set at thirty-six hundred dollars. In his will, he bequeathed her and her children their freedom and commended them into the care of Estelle Savage. The reason for this is not given although Levi made the statement, "my children know why." According to John Sheftall, Levi D'Lyon was the acknowledged father of numerous mulatto children.

* At some time shortly before his death, Levi D'Lyon repudiated Judaism and became a member

---

*"Ibid., Folio 26.

"Ibid., Folio 24.

Sheftall, Interview."
of a Protestant denomination. '37 January of 1863 brought the reelection of Judge D'Lyon to the bench of the City Court of Savannah. '38 Within eight months, Levi went into a decline and died at his home on August 28, 1863. '39 The cause of death was given as inflammation of the bladder. '40 He was mourned by all of Savannah. The Chatham County Bar Association published a "Tribute of Respect" in the Daily Morning News in which they resolved to attend his funeral as a body and to drape the City Court in mourning. The members also "offered a willing tribute to his courtesy, industry, and impartiality." '41 Judge Levi D'Lyon was buried on Sunday morning, August 30, 1863 at 10:30, '42 in the family plot (1402) in Laurel Grove Cemetery. '43 His will was qualified in Chatham County Probate Court on August 31, 1863 by his executors, Thomas E. Boyd, Julian Hartridge, and George Owens. '44 Levi D'Lyon's personal and real property was auctioned off in October of 1863, with his house on York Street (Lot 3, Percival Ward) commanding the extraordinary

'37 Ibid.
'39 Ibid., August 29, 1863, p. 1, c. 1.
'40 Ibid., September 3, 1863, p. 2, c. 4.
'41 Ibid., August 29, 1863, p. 2, c. 4.
'42 Ibid., p. 1, c. 3.
'43 W.P.A., Index to Laurel Grove, lot 1401.
'44 D'Lyon, Will, Folio 22.
$22,500. The estate sold the remaining twenty-one slaves (excluding Anna and her children) for a total value of $25,800.00. The total value of his estate that was paid out and converted to stocks and bonds was $75,073.97. Levi D'Lyon's estate was closed out by his executors on September 14, 1864.

145 Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia) Deed Book JW, Folio 16.

146 D'Lyon, Will, Folio 37.

147 Ibid.
VI. Descendants

It seems a tragedy that Levi D'Lyon was never reconciled to his daughter, Leonora Harby. John Sheftall stated that it was a great irony that only Leonora of all Levi's children married a Jew, and her spouse was the one Levi D'Lyon could not stand. She moved to Galveston, Texas with her husband Levi C. Harby, and was the mother of three children. Of all the D'Lyon clan, Leonora Harby went on to become the most well-known. She was a Jewish scholar and set up the first Jewish Sunday school in Texas and founded the Ladies Hebrew Benevolent Society of Galveston. Her husband, Levi C. Harby, was the first Surgeon General of the Confederate Army. After the death of Harby, Leonora married a prominent Galveston physician, Edward Randall.

Leonorean never married and after his father's death, he also emigrated to Texas. He became a professor of foreign languages at the Dangerfield High School in Dangerfield, Texas. The date of his death is unknown, but he was alive in 1875, when his brother, Isaac, died.

149 Sheftall, Interview.

150 Ibid.

152 Stern, Jewish Families, 93.

153 Savannah Morning News, March 3, 1876, p. 3, c. 2.
Isaac also spent his life as a bachelor. Like his siblings, he moved to Texas, where he took up farming. His obituary states that he was at one time the editor of the Troupville, Georgia newspaper, the Watchman. On the afternoon of December 18, 1875, Isaac was killed instantly by a kick from a vicious mule.\footnote{Ibid.}
VII. Epilogue

Levi Sheftall D'Lyon wanted to be remembered for his terms as a judge. He wrote his own epitaph in his will:

Levi Sheftall D'Lyon
Late Judge of the City Court of Savannah
Born at Savannah
October 23, 1791
Died at Savannah
August 28, 1863

John Sheftall, a first cousin of Levi D'Lyon many times removed, was kind enough to provide a great deal of insight about Levi. Unfortunately, Mr. Sheftall's interview came only a few days before the biography was due and writing was well underway. Time limitations restricted the further corroboration of the parentage of Anna D'Lyon's five children. John Sheftall stated that this information is located in the Baptismal Records of the Catholic Diocese of Savannah.

He also provided the name of a descendant currently residing in the Savannah area, a great-granddaughter of Josephine D'Lyon. I had a delightful interview with Ms. Pondrom on May 27, 1992 at her home in Savannah. She spoke of her great-great grandfather as a kindly and sociable man. Ms. Pondrom stated that there were many speculative stories amongst the D'Lyon descendants regarding the source of the animosity between Levi D'Lyon and Levi Harby. The most charming of these stories is one in which, prior to Mr. Harby's marriage to Leonora, he had been seen riding in a carriage to the races in Charleston with a lady of questionable character. She also confirmed that Levi D'Lyon was in fact a member of the Trinity Methodist Church.

She had no portraits of Levi D'Lyon and knew of none in existence. I was shown a photograph of the three grand-daughters: Leonora, Rebecca, and Josephine. The three were lovely young ladies with dark eyes and hair and fine features. Unfortunately, the inheritance that Levi D'Lyon bequeathed to them never materialized. It was lost between legal problems and the South's loss of the war, which made Levi's Confederate money worthless. To Ms. Pondrom, her own great-grandfather, James W. D'Lyon, was the family member who probably ought to have been disowned. She stated that James never actually graduated from West Point, he was a "lousy student" and came home in disgrace.
Summary:

Occupants: W

Condition: Poor

Use Base: 3

Type: 1st, 2nd Floor

Foundation: Concrete

Walls: Wood

Roof: Wood

Windows: Metal Frame

Special Notes:

- North end of lot to top.

---

Appendix B

Field Sketch

Dimensions:

- 0' 3' 0
- 0' 13' 0
- 0' 18' 0
- 0' 19' 0
- 0' 26' 0
- 0' 38' 0
- 0' 42' 0

Rooms:

- Attic
- Kitchen
- Bath

---

Exterior Walls

- Sheathing: Corr. Iron
- Exterior: Field Stone
- Roof: Roll Stone
- Windows: Metal Frame

---

Interior Walls

- Sheathing: Cement
- Roof: Metal Frame
- Windows: Metal Frame

---

Roof Materials

- Thatch
- Corr. Iron
- Field Stone
- Roll Stone
- Metal Frame
- Metal Window

---

Exterior Trim

- Exterior: Field Stone
- Windows: Metal Frame

---

Foundation

- Concrete
- Wood
- Metal Frame

---

Notes:

- North end of lot to top.
SOURCES CONSULTED

Articles

Books

Duncan, Alexander M., Officers and Members of the Georgia Hussars, Savannah: Morning News, 1895.

Interviews

Belzer, Rabbi Arnold Mark. Interview by Author, April 21, 1992, Congregation Mickve Israel, Savannah, Georgia.

Interview by Author, May 13, 1992, Congregation Mickve Israel, Savannah, Georgia.

Sheftall, John. Interview by Author, May 21, 1992, Telephone interview, Atlanta, Georgia.
Manuscripts

Alexander Atkinson Papers, Georgia Historical Society
Manuscript Collection, Manuscript 1198, Folder 2, Item 18; Folder 4, Item 55; Folder 5, Item 76.

Works Progress Administration, (Writers' Project) General Index to Keeper's Record Books 1852-1938, Laurel Grove Cemetery (Savannah, Georgia) WPA Official Project 465-34-3-148, hand-typed copy of original, 1939.

Maps

Cadastral Survey of Lot 3, Percival Ward, 1937. Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia).

Monuments

Clarence Abraham D'Lyon Tombstone, Lot 1402, Laurel Grove Cemetery, Savannah, Georgia.

Elizabeth Josephine D'Lyon Tombstone, Lot 1402, Laurel Grove Cemetery, Savannah, Georgia.

James Wayne D'Lyon Tombstone, Lot 1402, Laurel Grove Cemetery, Savannah, Georgia.

Leonora DeLaMotta D'Lyon Tombstone, Lot 11A, Old Hebrew Cemetery, Savannah Georgia.

Rebecca DeLaMotta D'Lyon Tombstone, Lot 11, Old Hebrew Cemetery, Savannah Georgia.

Newspapers

Columbia Museum and Savannah Gazette, 1817-1820, passim.

Daily Georgian, 1836-1855, passim.

Daily Morning News, 1856-1863, passim.

Georgian, 1820-1836, passim.
Republican and Savannah Evening Ledger, May 2, 1809, p. 3, c. 2, and June 29, 1809, p. 2, c. 1.

Savannah Morning News, March 3, 1876, p. 3, c. 2.

Savannah Museum, March 28, 1822, to September 24, 1822, passim.

Public Records

Chatham County Probate Court (Savannah, Georgia) Record of Marriages: 1806-1851, Folio 99.

Chatham County Superior Court (Savannah, Georgia) Deeds:
Deed Book 2G, Folios 44, 115, 393, 402.
Deed Book 2I, Folio 391.
Deed Book 2K, Folio 254.
Deed Book 2L, Folios 105, 106.
Deed Book 2M, Folios 83, 203.
Deed Book 2N, Folio 528.
Deed Book 2O, Folios 142, 147, 368, 479.
Deed Book 2Q, Folios 233, 331.
Deed Book 2R, Folios 56, 175.
Deed Book 2S, Folio 40.
Deed Book 2T, Folios 17, 230, 262.
Deed Book 2U, Folios 53, 54, 248, 299.
Deed Book 2W, Folio 130.
Deed Book 3A, Folio 14.
Deed Book 3C, Folio 249.
Deed Book 3D, Folios 46, 48, 172, 239.
Deed Book 3E, Folios 30, 302, 399.
Deed Book 3F, Folios 127, 128, 195.
Deed Book 3G, Folios 81, 365.
Deed Book 3H, Folios 59, 213, 238.
Deed Book 3I, Folio 210.
Deed Book 3L, Folios 14, 112, 334.
Deed Book 3M, Folios 394.
Deed Book 3O, Folio 496.
Deed Book 3P, Folios 69, 381.
Deed Book 3R, Folios 284, 314, 473.
Deed Book 3S, Folio 170.
Deed Book 3T, Folios 79, 337, 484.
Deed Book 3W, Folios 13, 16, 201, 209.
Deed Book 3X, Folio 102.
Deed Book 40, Folio 92.
Deed Book 4X, Folio 486.
Chatham County Vital Records (Savannah, Georgia) Death Certificate of Leonora DeLaMotta D'Lyon, January 20, (sic) 1819.

Chatham County Vital Records (Savannah, Georgia) Death Certificate of Rebecca DeLaMotta D'Lyon, February 17, 1829.

Georgia Census of 1820 (Chatham County).
Georgia Census of 1830 (Chatham County).
Georgia Census of 1840 (Chatham County).
Georgia Census of 1850 (Camden County).
Georgia Census of 1850 (Chatham County).
Georgia Census of 1860 (Chatham County).